Dear Licensee:

One year has ended and another is beginning, giving us a reason to take stock of all we've accomplished. Most businesses would be nothing without the loyalty of customers or clients. Customer appreciation efforts should be part of any business's New Year's resolutions, reminding them to find a way to say thank you. A customer is the most important visitor on our premises. I would like to thank all our customers, industry representatives and employees for their hard work. We will continue to find ways to enhance service, increase revenues and reevaluate the operation for effective ways to better serve the citizens of Alabama.

Since the ABC Board's creation 85 years ago, those revenues have totaled more than $8.6 billion for the people of Alabama. What's even better is that the state of Alabama didn't have to provide one dime to pay for the ABC Board's operations, which includes regulating, licensing and inspecting businesses that sell alcoholic beverages and tobacco products, and educating young people and adults about the dangers of irresponsible alcohol consumption and underage drinking.

The ABC Board pays for itself through its wholesale liquor operation and state-run liquor stores. We call them state stores because they belong to the people of the state of Alabama, and they exist to serve and benefit state residents.

I offer these facts because it's important for Alabamians to know how the ABC Board and its stores are working for them. This year, the ABC Board began offering an online resource, www.Wheredoesthemoneygoalabama.com, that explains – literally – where ABC revenues go. The website lists how revenues support many essential state services that too often go underfunded.

For example, the Department of Human Resources, which has the difficult task of ensuring the welfare of Alabama's at-risk children, received $84.7 million directly from the ABC Board in fiscal year 2020-2021. The Department of Mental Health was the beneficiary of $63.4 million from the ABC Board. In addition, the ABC Board provided $37.1 million to education, $17 million to the Alabama Law Enforcement Agency and $22.8 million to various cities and counties. And all of that was in addition to the $136.8 million the ABC Board sent to the state General Fund Budget to help pay for other state services.

Aside from highlighting ABC Board revenue, www.Wheredoesthemoneygoalabama.com also explains how Alabama's system of liquor control is unique and effective. Alabama is one of 17 "control states" that regulate the sale of alcoholic beverages through distribution, licensing, regulation, law enforcement and education. But Alabama is the only state that offers citizens a choice between state-run stores and private stores. It may surprise some people that Alabama has far more private liquor stores – more than 700 – than state stores – 168.

That system is working. Alabama ranks among the nation's leaders in per capita state revenue from the sale of liquor, while maintaining one of the nation's lowest levels of per capita consumption. That is what Alabama citizens should demand from its regulatory agency.

The Board and I realize that you are indispensable to our success, and we hope that the combination of our services and products are meeting your needs. As always, customer service remains a top priority. Please feel free to contact my office any time you have a question or need assistance.

Sincerely,

H.M. Gipson

Let the Good Times Roll

BY CLARE TAYLOR

It is the unofficial saying of the nearing holiday Mardi Gras, also called Fat Tuesday. Come February, the biggest day of feasting and overindulgence will take place before the Lenten season. Lent, the prescribed time of fasting, forgoing certain luxuries and penance, is between Ash Wednesday and Easter. It makes sense that Mardi Gras is the big festival to ball out prior to 40 days of self-denial (pun intended). Mardi Gras, also called 'Carnival' in other countries, reaches farther than just Louisiana, it is celebrated in many Catholic-dominated countries all over the world; Spain, Mexico, Italy, and Brazil to name a few. Looking for a 2-week lasting festivity? Spain hosts a riotous Mardis Gras with street theater, costume contests and competitions like beauty pageants that pick a queen. In Italy it is more exclusive with private balls and galas, where you're expected to wear an over the top costume and mask. Brazil has the biggest Mardis Gras in the world, two million people attend per day on the street. Samba dance is the main display, with the parade occurring in a stadium specifically built for Mardi Gras.

But we all know that New Orleans can throw a good Mardi Gras party. New Orleans public drinking rules are lax and you will see people walking around with the famous plastic go-cups. A few offerings from the local bars include rows of slushee flavors, jello shots, Hurricane cocktails, Sazerac cocktails and the infamous Hand Grenade (a neon-green drink served in grenade-shaped containers).

Masked up

Masks were originally worn during Mardi Gras to allow parade-goers to escape society and class constraints—creating a sense of unity by breaking down barriers.

4½ Champagne

Pour the absinthe into a coupe. Top slowly with the Champagne.

Carnival Float

New Orleans floats once were used as a way to express opinions and mock public officials and hot-button topics of the day.

½ oz Black Rum (key ingredient)

Muddle mint with simple, add rum, lime, and simple, shake with ice. Strain into collins and top with soda. Finally add your black rum to float on top.

Bananerac

The sazerac is the official drink of New Orleans but a variation is needed for this special occasion.

1 oz rye whiskey

1 oz armagnac (or cognac)

½ oz banana liqueur

½ tsp demerara simple syrup (1:1)

1 dash angostura

Rinse rocks glass with absinthe, discard excess. Mix rye, Armagnac, Banana liqueur, demerara simple and bitters in mixing glass with ice, strain into rocks glass with fresh ice. Garnish with lemon.

King Cake Shot

King Cakes get their name from the biblical story of the three kings bringing gifts to baby Jesus. Finding the baby in your slice signifies luck and prosperity.

1½ vanilla or cake vodka

1½ rumchata

Top with whipped cream and grated nutmeg

2 oz dry gin
1 oz dry vermouth

The quality of American whiskey has never been better—and consumer demand never greater—with no end in sight.

11 Whiskey Trends

BY KYLE SWARTZ

Note: This excerpt is printed with permission from the Fall 2022 issue of StateWays—the Beverage Alcohol Merchandising Magazine for Control States.

Covid-19 has left its marks in all industries, distilling included. Numerous trends have emerged in American whiskey during the pandemic. Perhaps most important was consumers, sheltering at home, who had more time to research and explore through everything this category has to offer. Suddenly, everybody has become a bourbon aficionado.

Our thirst for whiskey has spiked to historic highs. But how long will this new golden age continue? And what does this elevated consumer enthusiasm portend for the [future]?

1) SINGLE BARREL PICKS

Perhaps the hottest trend in whiskey is single barrel picks. These give clubs, influencers, and retail stores the ability to buy and bottle their own juice. Consumers and fans flock to these picks.

“We’re doing more single barrel picks now than before Covid,” says

Woodford Reserve Master Distiller Chris Morris. “This program provides high-quality whiskey with an aspect of personalization and uniqueness to it.”

That uniqueness is key in a time when finding and buying the trendiest brand-name whiskeys has never been harder. Good luck getting anything Buffalo Trace these days. If you cannot acquire these kinds of “unicorns” or “taters,” but still want something unique, then single barrel picks are an easy-to-find special bottle for your collection.

After all, these are rarer than any allocated product. Coming from a single barrel, they’re one-of-one, never repeated. And you do not have to break the bank.

Beyond providing uniqueness at an affordable price, single barrels also allow retailers to highlight their skills. “They’re a great way for retailers like us to show off our palates,” says Caroline Paulus, whiskey historian at Justins’ House of Bourbon and senior editor of The Bourbon Review. Justins’ House of Bourbon is among the leading retailers of whiskey picks in the country. “And usually these picks are reasonably priced and something different to drink. Every single time, these are bourbons you’ve never had before,” she adds. “And that’s what many consumers want these days.”

2) “SOURCED WHISKEY” IS SOUGHT AFTER

Not long ago, words like “sourced” and “MGP” were vulgar terms. Looked down upon in whiskey culture. Not anymore. In a 180-degree turn, consumers now hunt down brands that source good whiskey. People now know that MGP and other sourcing houses mean “quality,” which in turn has fueled a rise in new brands.

“Sourced whiskey is a necessity for young brands,” says Mike Montgomery, CEO and cofounder of Blue Run Spirits, which launched in 2020 with several sourced offerings. “It fills a void while the distillate we’re distilling becomes mature.”

Handled properly with transparency and creativity, sourced whiskey has proven a popular product. A big part of the backlash against sourced brands years ago was a distaste for any dishonesty about where the product was distilled. Modern brands now know better.

“We’ll be as transparent as can legally be,” says Montgomery. “We can’t disclose the exact distillery it came from or sometimes even the mash bill. But on our most recent release, we could disclose the mash bill. That was a first for us."

Penelope Bourbon is another fast-emerging sourced brand. Again, transparency is at the heart of their operations. "We only work with MGP, and they're great partners and mentors," says Penelope CEO and Cofounder Michael Paladini. "We've got nothing to hide. These people make great whiskey. We look at this as an advantage, not a negative."

3) WHISKEY CONSUMERS GROW SMARTER

Consumer knowledge of whiskey has never been higher. For everyone who doesn't understand the difference between "bourbon" and "whiskey," there's now another who can name and describe each Four Roses mash bill. Stuck at home during the pandemic, whiskey fans studied like preparing for a final exam in bourbon. Their enthusiasm for fine details is unprecedented.

4) WHISKEY TOURISM EXPLODES

Want to know how much longer is left in our current whiskey golden age? Look at Louisville. The number of new distilleries has grown exponentially, while existing producers have enhanced their tourism capabilities considerably. During the lockdowns of 2020, Buffalo Trace tripled the size of their visitor center. Heaven Hill snipped the opening ribbon on its own $19-million visitor center expansion this summer.

Even during these later stages of the pandemic, people have flocked to Kentucky for distillery tourism. Louisville and Bardstown have become the new Napa and Sonoma valleys. The Kentucky Bourbon Trail expands continuously. Visitors pack into buses that stop at nearly every distillery. Bachelor and bachelorette parties crowd Louisville bars. Business is booming.

"Kentucky is within a day's drive of a huge portion of the United States," Paulus points out. "Whiskey tourism was exploding for us before the pandemic. We had guests coming from all over the world. And we've bounced back, stronger than ever. I've seen huge numbers of people rolling through. It's crazy how many people come to Kentucky and want to buy a bottle of bourbon—or 20 or 30 bottles."

Of course, American whiskey also

The number of new distilleries has grown exponentially, while existing producers have enhanced their tourism capabilities considerably.

attracts strong tourism beyond the meccas of Kentucky, Indiana, and Tennessee. "Whiskey tourism will continue to grow," says Paul Hletko, founder and distiller at craft pioneer Few Spirits, in Evanston, Illinois. "Something about whiskey gets people really excited to learn more about it. And there's no better way to learn than to see it firsthand, smell the stills, and understand where the products come from. Whiskey is a story in a glass," he adds. "Whiskey can transport you to a different place, and that inspires people to dive deeper."

5) MORE BARREL FINISHING

With so much demand for American whiskey, brands have expanded their lines through barrel finishing. These different takes on a distillery's core products provide what consumers crave most: variety. However, many distillers and blenders do urge caution about over-innovation through finishing. You can risk turning away customers with too many different options, as happened in craft beer some years ago.

"They're a lot of fun, barrel finishes, but you can fall down a rabbit hole with that stuff," says Paladine. The company's recent cask finishes include grenache and rosé wine. "As a company, you've got to be different, but there are different scales of that. I think finishes work better as limited releases. If that goes well, then you introduce them as a core expression."

Echoing his concerns is David DeFazio, cofounder of Wyoming Whiskey. "What concerns me is the distillery that has not mastered its base product and then uses barrel finishing to mask imperfections," he says. "That does the industry a disservice. A 'sherry bomb' finished whiskey that masks mistakes—that's a Band-Aid. Consumers who pick up that bottle, it'll make them turn away from the category." However, for distilleries that have already fine-tuned their base spirits, DeFazio sees finishes as a natural extension. "Now they're looking for a barrel that can enhance their product," he says.

6) PREMIUMIZATION AND INNOVATION

Barrel finishing and innovation are part of a bigger trend that has fueled the modern whiskey boom from the beginning. That is premiumization. Consumers are willing to pay up for pricier bottles.

"Customers are telling us that's what they want," says Nicole Austin, general manager and distiller at Cascade Hollow Distilling Co., maker of George Dickel Tennessee Whisky. "People have a taste for affordable luxuries to treat themselves. And something like a nice spirit fits right in that. So I think that part in particular, premiumization, is going to continue to grow."

This "treat yourself" mentality has only grown during the challenging years of the pandemic. Affordable luxuries have helped us endure this difficult time.

Interesting, premium innovations have also driven growth in the industry. "As a former liquor retailer, we learned firsthand that new products are the lifeblood of retail," says Jay Erisman, cofounder and distiller at New Riff Distilling.

7) THE WHISKEY BOOM CONTINUES

Burying the lede here for whatever suspense is possible, but the consumer enthusiasm explored above has likely already given away this defining trend. Ask around the industry, and everyone—everyone—predicts more good times ahead for American whiskey.

"I think we're still in the meat of it," says DeFazio. "It certainly seems like whiskey—bourbon in particular—has hit the mainstream. Educated consumers and tastemakers led the initial charge. We're past that stage now. Those initial people have folded in their friends, who have picked it up and liked it and it's spreading. It also seems to that investment from major suppliers has not slowed down," he adds. "We've upped our own production, based on our bullish view of the future."

Leading distilleries around the country have invested many millions in operations in recent years. Both Buffalo Trace and Woodford Reserve are currently amidst expansions that will double production. Beyond its new visitor center, Heaven Hill also invested $106 million in production.

The craft side of the industry also sees sunny skies ahead. "I don't see any signs of things slowing down," says Kletko, former president of the Board of Directors for the American Craft Spirits Association. "I think we're going to continue to grow for a while. We're still below the high-water mark for whiskey volume in America. That mark was set 50 years ago, and with 50 years of population growth,

I think whiskey volume can continue to go up."

8) DIVERSITY AND INCLUSIVITY

The whiskey industry—like much of the country—has made great strides in recent years to improve diversity and inclusivity. More work remains, but this category seems ready to shed old, false stereotypes in favor of the realities and benefits of a broader group of participants.

"There's so much diversity growing in the category now," says Austin.

Consumers are willing to pay up for pricier bottles. . . .
[A] "treat yourself" mentality has only grown during the challenging years of the pandemic.

"We're not just adding same on top of same, but widening the category in a way that I think is going to bring a lot of people into it. So there's still tons of growth ahead for American whiskey."

This includes leadership growth, as a diverse, new crop of decision-makers . . . move into prominent roles.

9) PAIN FROM THE GLASS SHORTAGE

Covid-19 has roiled production and shipping industries worldwide, including American whiskey. Distribution remains disrupted. Perhaps even more threatening is the lingering glass shortage. Obtaining bottles for product is not simple task.

"The glass shortage is definitely a challenge," says Hletko. "It's one of the things we're going to get over. The marketplace will equalize with time, but there will be short-term pain."

"Nobody wants to buy extra glass, but you have to now, and that delays everybody else," he adds. "It's a non-virtuous cycle. It's real, and it's going to affect product availability and pricing."

"People keep saying that the supply-chain issues could be felt for years, and I do think so, myself," says Paladini. "I think we're still in the first inning of wild and crazy times." To his point, paper labels, cork and other closures all remain in short supply during this time of disruption.

10) SOCIAL MEDIA SHAPES WHISKEY CULTURE

Influencers on social media already held large sway over consumer sentiment. Now another growing area of the online ecosystem has gripped whiskey culture. The size and number of whiskey groups on social media has spiked during the pandemic. People stuck at home and passing time on their phones and computers joined these groups in droves.

Naturally, this affects local whiskey markets. When a bottle becomes trendy in a group, posted by everybody, it disappears from retail shelves. At the same time, social media has allowed brands to grow faster and connect personally with consumers unlike ever before. . . . Savvy brands tap into these collective consumers, as the social media groups grow in size and influence.

11) WHISKEY PRICES CONTINUE TO RISE

Follow any of these groups and it's among the hottest talking points: whiskey prices are going up, up, up, up, up.

Retailers increasingly stock trendier brands for prices that people pay on secondary. On social media, these shops have received the derogatory nickname, "museum." Enter to see the rare dusty exhibits—behind glass, and at prices you couldn't possibly afford—and then exit the museum. (But someone must be buying, right?)

These “museums” now skip the middleman, the lifeblood of the secondary market: the flipper. Big demand with limited supply means that sought-after items naturally rise in price. And people look to profit. . . . Yes, it's unfortunate that the secondary market prices more people out of obtaining trendy bottles. But this is not a sign of a broken system. Much the opposite, a big secondary market indicates that whiskey is flourishing.

And are higher prices even that bad? Mocking “museums” can be fun, but these stores do reflect the massive demand for American whiskey. And that demand would not sustain if products failed to meet expectations. The best of American whiskey showcases world-class quality and consistency.

“Some Scotch bottles can fetch $50,000,” says Paulus. “With bourbon, only a few brands can fetch those prices right now. Looking at MSRP alone, bourbon is still so far behind the rest of the world. I'd like to see more bourbons valuing themselves at what I think bourbon is worth. A lot has changed. Paying $3,000 for a whiskey was inconceivable 20 years ago, when there were only nine distilleries in Kentucky, struggling to stay afloat.”

And yet, not all whiskey is highly priced.

“It's real mixed depending on where you are,” says Austin. “You're seeing rising prices on some whiskeys. That's us as consumers of high-end whiskeys looking at it narrowly. In the category in general, there's still a lot of affordable whiskeys out there.”

Add in continued disruption of shipping and production, and whiskey prices will almost certainly head higher. Some retailers may still stock trendy bottles at or near SRP, but these “honey holes” are drying up fast. That's because the product is amazing, everybody wants it and there isn't enough.

Tequila NOW & THEN

BY CLARE TAYLOR

TEQUILA'S AND IT'S PREDECESSOR

Tequila may be your party favorite or your worst nightmare, but this drink made from the hearts of the agave plant, has been around for a very LONG time. Tequila's predecessor, called "pulque," was imbibed as early as 150 B.C. by the inhabitants of ancient Teotihuacan, a civilization that pre-dates the Aztecs. It was a sacred drink, consumed by the gods, their priests and their sacrificial victims (one can only assume it eased their pain). This cloudy drink, still made today, can be best described as a strong kombucha, tasting earthy and yeast-like.

SPANISH CONQUEST

During the conquistador era, the Spanish made pulque less of a sacred use and more for commoners, becoming a large source of tax revenue. Around this time pulque was starting to be distilled by the Spaniards, exploiting their control over the growing and processing of agave plants.

FIRST KNOWN TEQUILAS AND EXPORTS

Don Pedro Sánchez de Tagle, Marquis of Altamira, the 'father of tequila,' established the very first tequila factory in his Hacienda Cuisillos in 1600 making 'mezcal wines' and eventually tequila. Historical references mention its first use for medicinal purposes, including rheumatic cures by rubbing tequila on the affected parts of the body. In 1785, the production of all spirits, including mezcal and pulque, was banned by the government of Charles III to favor and promote the importation of Spanish alcohols. Production was halted and went underground. Prohibition may have led to the practice of baking the agave underground, the same practice that continues today in mezcal production. The ban was lifted when King Ferdinand IV ascended the throne and taxation became a better means of control over prohibition. The University of Guadalajara was paid for in part by taxes on mezcal wines.

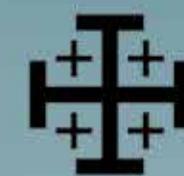

TEQUILA PIONEERS

The first licensed Tequila producer was José Antonio Cuervo, who secured the rights to cultivate a piece of land from the King of Spain in 1758. By 1880, when railroads appeared, Cuervo was selling 10,000 barrels of tequila throughout the Americas with the first bottle being sold by the early 19th century. As other distilleries opened, Tequila fed America; being a cheaper import than other spirits from Europe. It is known that Bing Crosby was so taken with one particular brand of Tequila, Herradura, that he teamed up with fellow actor Phil Harris to import the brand into the United States. Tequila came into America being labeled by early Hollywood as the 'party drink.'

Before the 70's, the majority of the tequila brought into the United States was not considered premium as they would be composed of fermented agave sugar and other sugars. To be considered baseline Tequila, Mexican law requires it to be at least 51% of Blue Agave. It was not until 1983 that the first premium tequila, made from 100% agave, was introduced and now a majority of our preferred Tequila picks, particularly the celebrity brands, are premium or ultra-premium (Patron, Casamigos, 818, Teremana).

Anything less than 100% agave is colloquially called mixto and is culturally unacceptable as sipping tequila. But you could probably get away with using mixto in a cocktail, I won't tell.

Celebrate All Things Chocolate

Valentine's Day—the perfect time to promote spirits flavored with dark, light, white, mint, cocoa, and every other kind of chocolate imaginable.

Prominently display an enticing array of chocolate-flavored spirits and liqueurs, and encourage your customers to sip these luscious beverages from special-occasion glasses, splash them into hot coffee, and pour them over cake or ice cream for special desserts. Also suggest they use these flavor-rich spirits to create new drinks as well as variations of their favorite cocktails.
